About This Content

Presenting the Olivia Pilling Art Chess set; specially commissioned by Purling London and now available in the virtual world of Chess Ultra.

Created by Northern-England based artist Olivia Pilling, each traditional Staunton piece in this set has been given a contemporary make-over with a rich colour palette and abstract design. Inspired by Russian folk art, the Olivia Pilling Art Chess set is incredibly stylish and guaranteed to make a statement on the chess board.

This pack contains a chess set only, which can be used in any environment in the game.

Purchased during a sale for $3.99. It's very visually interesting, though I'm not quite seeing what makes it 'Russian folkart'. Not that I know anything about Russian folkart anyway.

It might be too visually interesting ... totally messed up my first game with it because I was paying more attention to how the pieces looked rather than where the pieces were on the board. That's not a mark against the set, though, but against my concentration.

The textures are of good quality - closely examining the pieces, it really looks like they've been hand-painted. It's fun to play with these.

Just know that you're only getting one skin on a Staunton set, and no environments.

I'm guessing that Purling had a lot of sway in the pricing of these pieces (it being their licensed material); or perhaps the license cost the devs so much that the devs need to charge this much to make even a modest profit on sales ... but from a consumer standpoint, the base $10 asking price is absolutely ridiculous, and shows how little Purling understands the digital DLC market.

It's not bad for $4, though even then it definitely feels like you're not getting good value for your money, considering $4 can get you much better DLCs in Chess Ultra. At $10, it's not worth buying.
